

THOMAS HARDIMAN AND CORRUPTION

Highlights:

- Thomas Hardiman contributed to Republican senators after their committee interviewed him for a judgeship.

Hardiman Contributed To Republican Senators After Their Committee Interviewed Him

2003: HARDIMAN CONTRIBUTED TO $4,400 TO TWO REPUBLICAN SENATORS' CAMPAIGNS AFTER APPEARING BEFORE THEIR COMMITTEE

2003: Hardiman Contributed To $4,400 To Two Republican Senators' Campaigns – Specter And Santorum – After Their Committee Interviewed Him For A Judgeship Nomination. According to Salon, “When Sen. Patrick Leahy steps in as Judiciary Committee chairman next year -- and he's already talking tough, using that White House-dreaded word subpoena -- one man who will likely have to face him is Judge Thomas M. Hardiman of Pennsylvania. Hardiman is a federal district court judge, appointed by President Bush in 2003, whom Bush has since nominated for a promotion to the nation's second highest bench. Leahy, along with Sen. Russ Feingold, is taking Hardiman to task for political contributions he made to key Republicans while he was under official consideration for his district judgeship, as revealed in October by Salon and the Center for Investigative Reporting, after a four-month investigation of Bush judges. Hardiman gave a combined $4,400 to Republican Sens. Arlen Specter and Rick Santorum (who lost his reelection bid in November) between the time Hardiman interviewed for his judgeship with the senators' selection committee and when Bush nominated him.” [Salon, 12/15/06]